- Iowa typically grows over 2.5 billion bushels of corn annually.
- 40 million pigs in the state 2023.
- Population of Iowa: 3.241 million

Yes, it is true that people in Iowa are generally known for holding doors for others. This is a well-known part of the "Iowa nice" cultural stereotype, which describes the generally friendly and helpful nature of Iowans. The act of holding a door for someone is a widespread gesture of politeness that many Iowans learn at a young age. For some, it's common courtesy, while for others, it's a matter of state pride and reinforcing a positive cultural identity.

This practice, however, can lead to some awkward situations. For instance, holding a door for someone who is still a fair distance away can put pressure on that person to speed up their pace.
